

Political Science Chapter 1, titled “What is Democracy? Why Democracy?”, is designed to establish a clear definition of democracy and then assess its strengths and weaknesses compared to other forms of government,.

Here is a detailed explanation of the chapter's key sections:

1. What is Democracy? (A Simple Definition and Its Limitations)

The chapter begins with a simple, widely accepted definition: Democracy is a form of government in which the rulers are elected by the people.

However, this basic definition is insufficient because many non-democratic countries hold elections or appear democratic on the surface. If applied carelessly, this simple definition would lead to calling almost every government that holds an election a democracy, which would be misleading. The goal of the chapter is therefore to define the minimum features required to distinguish a genuine democracy from a non-democratic government,.

The term itself is derived from the Greek word Demokratia, where demos means people and kratia means rule.

2. Key Features of Democracy

The simple definition is expanded through four essential features, identified by contrasting democracies with non-democratic regimes:

A. Major Decisions by Elected Leaders (Who are the Rulers?)

In a democracy, the authority to make the final decisions must reside with those who have been elected by the people.

- Non-Democratic Example: In Pakistan under General Pervez Musharraf, elections were held and assemblies were elected, but the real power to make final decisions rested with military officers who were not elected,.

B. Free and Fair Electoral Competition (What Kind of Election?)

Elections must offer a real choice between political alternatives, and the existing ruling party must have a fair chance of losing.

- Non-Democratic Examples: In China, candidates must be approved by the Chinese Communist Party, meaning voters have no serious choice, as the government is always formed by that party,. In Mexico (until 2000), although elections were held regularly, the ruling party (PRI) used unfair methods, like shifting polling booths and spending vast sums of money, ensuring they could not be defeated in practice,.

C. One Person, One Vote, One Value (Who are the People?)

This feature establishes the fundamental principle of political equality: in a democracy, each adult citizen must have one vote, and every vote must carry one value,.

- Non-Democratic Examples: Until 2015, women in Saudi Arabia did not have the right to vote. In Fiji, the electoral system dictated that the vote of an indigenous Fijian held more value than that of an Indian-Fijian.

D. Rule of Law and Respect for Rights (What Kind of Government?)

A democratic government must operate within limits defined by constitutional law and citizens' rights.

- Requirements: Citizens must be guaranteed basic rights (like freedom to think, form associations, and protest) that are respected by the state. The government must respect these rights and function according to basic rules, legislative mandates, and guarantees to minorities. Office holders are accountable to the law and other independent officials.
- Non-Democratic Example: In Zimbabwe under Robert Mugabe, the popular government routinely suppressed political opposition, ignored court judgments, and changed the constitution repeatedly to increase the president's powers, demonstrating that a popular government can still be autocratic and undemocratic,.

3. Why Democracy? (Arguments for its Superiority)

While democracy is often criticized, it is widely considered the best known form of government.

Arguments Against Democracy:

Common criticisms include the fact that leaders frequently change, leading to instability; it is dominated by political competition and power play with little room for morality; consultations lead to delays; and it can lead to corruption,,.

Arguments for Democracy:

1. More Accountable Form of Government: Democracy requires rulers to respond to the needs of the people, unlike non-democratic governments where rulers only act if they wish to. For instance, economists note that no large-scale famine has ever occurred in an independent and democratic country because governments must respond to food scarcity, in contrast to non-democratic regimes,.
2. Improves the Quality of Decision-Making: Democratic decisions involve consultation and discussion among many people, reducing the chances of rash or irresponsible outcomes.
3. Provides a Method to Deal with Differences and Conflicts: In diverse countries, democracy offers a peaceful solution for resolving sharp differences of opinion and interest. Since no group is a permanent winner or loser, democracy helps keep a country like India unified.
4. Enhances the Dignity of Citizens: Democracy is based on political equality, asserting that every citizen, rich or poor, has equal status and is considered a ruler, not a subject,.
5. Allows Correction of Mistakes: Democracy is better because it allows mechanisms to correct its own mistakes; mistakes cannot be hidden for long, and rulers who make errors can be changed,.

4. Broader Meanings of Democracy

The detailed definition focusing on elected government is considered the minimal objective. The chapter extends the concept in two broader ways:

1. As a Principle of Decision-Making: Democracy can apply to other institutions beyond government (like a family or organization). A democratic decision involves consultation and the consent of all affected parties on an equal basis.

2. As an Ideal Standard: Democracy can represent an ideal system that countries strive for, such as ensuring every citizen has basic education, equal resources, and freedom from hunger, thus distinguishing a minimal democracy from a good democracy. This ideal perspective emphasizes that the fate of a country depends on the active political participation of its citizens.

This explanation covers Political Science Chapter 2, titled "Constitutional Design," which explores the necessity and principles behind the rules that govern a democratic state.

1. What is a Constitution?

A constitution is the supreme law of a country. It is a set of written rules accepted by all people living together in a country.

A constitution serves several fundamental functions:

1. It generates a degree of trust and coordination essential for diverse people to live together.
2. It specifies how the government will be constituted and who holds the power to make which decisions.
3. It lays down limits on the powers of the government and outlines the rights of the citizens.
4. It expresses the aspirations of the people about creating a good society.

A constitution is required in all modern democracies, and since the French Revolution, it has become common practice for democracies to have a written constitution.

2. The South African Example: Struggle Against Apartheid

The chapter begins by examining the recent history of South Africa to illustrate why a constitution is essential, especially after a period of severe conflict.

The Apartheid Regime

Apartheid was a system of racial discrimination unique to South Africa, imposed by the white European settlers.

- People were divided and labeled based on skin colour: native Black people (about three-fourths of the population), 'coloured' (mixed races), and people who migrated from India.
- Non-whites were treated as inferiors and subjected to segregation, meaning separate public facilities like trains, hospitals, schools, and beaches existed for whites and blacks. Blacks were even forbidden from living in white areas unless they had a permit.
- The oppressive white racist government ruled by detaining, torturing, and killing thousands of black and coloured people.

The Transition to Democracy

The struggle against apartheid was led by the African National Congress (ANC), which included many workers' unions, the Communist Party, and sensitive whites. Nelson Mandela, a key ANC leader, was tried for treason and sentenced to life imprisonment in 1964, spending 27 years in Robben Island prison.

As protests increased, the white regime finally changed its policies, lifting bans on political parties and media restrictions. Nelson Mandela walked free in 1990. On April 26, 1994, the new national flag was unfurled, marking the end of apartheid and the birth of a multi-racial government.

Drafting the New Constitution

The new democracy faced immense challenges, as historical enemies (the oppressed black majority and the former white oppressors) had to live together as equals.

- The black majority agreed not to take revenge and insisted on building a new South Africa based on equality, social justice, and human rights.
- Both parties spent two years debating and drafting one of the finest constitutions globally, giving citizens extensive rights.
- This transition was possible due to the determination to turn bitter experiences into the binding glue of a "rainbow nation".
- The constitution represented a "solemn pact" to never permit a repetition of the racist, brutal past.

The primary purpose of writing down these rules was to build and maintain trust and ensure that the powerful majority would not compromise democratic principles or take away the property of the white minority.

3. The Making of the Indian Constitution

The making of the Indian Constitution took place under deeply difficult circumstances, including the trauma of Partition on religious differences (involving the killing of at least ten lakh people) and the difficult task of integrating the princely states.

The Path to Consensus

Unlike South Africa, India benefited from a consensus already developed during the freedom struggle.

- As early as 1928, Motilal Nehru and eight other Congress leaders drafted a constitution.
- In 1931, the resolution at the Karachi session committed to universal adult franchise, the right to freedom and equality, and protecting minority rights.
- Experience gained by Indians working in the weak legislative institutions set up under colonial laws (like the Government of India Act, 1935) also proved useful in framing the institutional structure.

The Constituent Assembly

The document was drafted by the Constituent Assembly, elected in July 1946.

- The Assembly had 299 members and eventually adopted the Constitution on November 26, 1949. It came into effect on January 26, 1950, celebrated annually as Republic Day.
- The Assembly worked in a systematic, open, and consensual manner, deliberating for 114 days spread over three years.
- A Drafting Committee, chaired by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, prepared the draft constitution for discussion, and over two thousand amendments were considered.
- The Constitution enjoys legitimacy today because it reflects the broad consensus of its time and its legitimacy has never been questioned by any large social group or political party over the past half-century.

4. Guiding Values: The Preamble

The basic philosophy and values of the Indian Constitution are contained in the Preamble, which guides all its articles.

The core values listed in the Preamble include:

- WE, THE PEOPLE OF INDIA: The constitution was drawn up and enacted by the people through their representatives, not handed down by an external power.
- SOVEREIGN: People have the supreme right to make internal and external decisions; no external power dictates the government.
- SOCIALIST (Added in 1976): Wealth should be shared equally by society, and the government should regulate land and industry ownership to reduce socio-economic inequalities.
- SECULAR (Added in 1976): Citizens have complete freedom to follow any religion, but there is no official religion, and the government treats all beliefs equally.
- DEMOCRATIC: A government form where people enjoy equal political rights, elect their rulers, hold them accountable, and the government is run according to basic rules.
- REPUBLIC: The head of the state is an elected person, not a hereditary monarch.
- JUSTICE: Citizens cannot be discriminated against based on caste, religion, or gender, and social inequalities must be reduced.
- LIBERTY: Citizens have the freedom to think, express their thoughts, and follow up their thoughts in action without unreasonable restrictions.
- EQUALITY: All are equal before the law, traditional social inequalities must end, and the government must ensure equal opportunity for all.
- FRATERNITY: All citizens should behave as members of the same family, assuring the dignity of the individual and the unity of the nation.

The makers of the Constitution did not view it as a sacred, static, or unalterable law, making provisions for Constitutional Amendments to incorporate changes required by societal evolution and people's aspirations.

This chapter, Political Science Chapter 3, is titled "Electoral Politics" and details the importance of elections in a democracy, outlines the democratic standards for holding elections, and examines how India's electoral system measures up against these standards,.

Here is an explanation covering the core themes of the chapter:

1. Why Elections are Necessary in a Democracy

In modern times, direct rule by all citizens is impossible in any large community due to the sheer number of people involved, as well as limitations on citizens' time and knowledge needed to decide on all matters. Therefore, modern democracies rely on rule through representatives, and elections provide the essential mechanism for selecting and holding these representatives accountable.

Through elections, voters make several crucial choices:

1. Choosing who will make laws for them.
2. Choosing who will form the government and take major decisions.
3. Choosing the party whose policies will guide the government and law-making.

2. The Role of Political Competition

Political competition, though often criticized, is deemed necessary in a functioning democracy.

- Arguments Against Competition: Critics argue that electoral competition leads to disunity, factionalism, and leaders leveling allegations against one another. It may also result in sensible long-term policies being neglected due to the pressure to win quick electoral fights.
- Arguments For Competition: Political leaders are naturally motivated by the desire for power and personal gain. Electoral competition is a realistic system that forces parties and leaders to serve the people. They know that if they fail to satisfy voters with their work, they will lose the next election, compelling them to raise and address issues the people want addressed,. This competition acts like a market, forcing self-interested leaders to provide good service to secure votes.

3. Minimum Conditions for a Democratic Election

To distinguish truly democratic elections from non-democratic ones (where rulers hold elections but offer no real choice), five minimum conditions must be met:

1. Universal Right to Choose: Everyone must be able to choose, meaning one vote for every person, and each vote must have equal value.
2. Real Choice: Parties and candidates must be genuinely free to contest, offering voters real choices between political alternatives.
3. Regular Intervals: Elections must be held regularly. In India, Lok Sabha and Vidhan Sabha (Assembly) elections are held regularly every five years.
4. Popular Choice: The candidate chosen by the people should actually get elected.
5. Free and Fair Environment: Elections must be conducted fairly, enabling people to vote as they truly wish.

4. Key Features of the Indian Electoral System

India follows an area-based system of representation, dividing the country into electoral constituencies.

- Electoral Constituencies: For Lok Sabha elections, the country is divided into 543 constituencies. Each Parliamentary constituency contains several Assembly constituencies. To ensure that "every vote should have equal value," each constituency is required to have a roughly equal population.
- Reserved Constituencies: A special system reserves seats for Scheduled Castes (SC) and Scheduled Tribes (ST), as these weaker sections might otherwise lack the resources or contacts to win elections in open competition,. This aims to make Parliament and Assemblies more representative. As of January 26, 2019, 84 seats are reserved for SCs and 47 for STs in the Lok Sabha, proportional to their share of the population. One-third of seats in rural (Panchayat) and urban (Municipal) bodies are also reserved for women, (and in Parliament and Legislative Assemblies as per the Nari Shakti Vandan Adhiniyam, 2023).
- Voters' List (Electoral Roll): This list, prepared before the election, includes all citizens aged 18 years and above who have the right to vote, regardless of caste, religion, or gender,.
- Nomination of Candidates: The minimum age for being a candidate is 25 years. Candidates must submit a legal declaration detailing any serious criminal cases pending against them, their family's assets and liabilities, and their educational qualifications; this information is made public,.
- Election Campaign and Conduct: Campaigns take place for a roughly two-week period. A Model Code of Conduct prohibits practices like bribery, threatening voters, using government vehicles or facilities, and appealing on the basis of caste or religion,.
- Polling and Results: Votes are recorded using Electronic Voting Machines (EVMs). Agents of all candidates are present during polling and counting to guarantee fairness,. The candidate receiving the highest number of votes is declared elected.

5. Assessment of Indian Elections (Free and Fair)

Indian elections are considered generally free and fair based on three key factors:

1. Independent Election Commission (EC): Elections are overseen by a powerful and independent Election Commission. The Chief Election Commissioner (CEC) enjoys the same independence as the judiciary, making it virtually impossible for the ruling party to remove the CEC. The EC possesses vast powers to control the conduct of elections, implement the Code of Conduct, and order officials to follow guidelines, ensuring that ruling parties must comply with its directives,.
2. High Popular Participation: Voter turnout has remained stable or increased over the years, unlike the declining trend in some other democracies. Crucially, the poor, illiterate, and underprivileged sections vote in a larger proportion compared to the rich, demonstrating that common people feel their vote matters.
3. Acceptance of the Outcome: The ultimate test is the outcome itself; if elections were unfair, the powerful ruling parties would not lose. In India, ruling parties routinely lose elections at both the national and state levels, demonstrating that the electoral outcome generally reflects the popular verdict,.

However, the democratic quality faces significant challenges:

- Candidates with large amounts of money enjoy an unfair advantage over smaller parties and independents.
- There is a visible presence of candidates with known criminal connections, who are sometimes given tickets by major parties.
- Dynastic politics is common, where certain families dominate political parties, distributing tickets to relatives.
- Voters often face limited choices because major parties may be quite similar in their fundamental policies and practices.

Political Science Chapter 4, "Working of Institutions," explores how major decisions are taken, implemented, and enforced within a democratic government. The central theme is that democracy requires rulers to work within institutional limits and set procedures, ensuring accountability and preventing arbitrary rule.

The chapter explains the structure and roles of the three key political institutions at the national level (Central Government): the Legislature, the Executive, and the Judiciary.

1. The Need for Institutions and Decision Making

Governing a country requires addressing various activities, such as ensuring security, providing education and health facilities, collecting taxes, and implementing welfare schemes. Institutions are the established arrangements or organizations designed to handle these tasks and ensure that the work continues even if key personnel change,.

Working with institutions involves rules, regulations, meetings, and routines, which can sometimes lead to delays; however, these complexities are essential in a democracy because they allow a wider range of people to be consulted, preventing rash or ill-conceived decisions,.

Case Study: The Mandal Commission Order

The process of implementing the 27% reservation for Socially and Educationally Backward Classes (SEBC) in civil posts (issued via an Office Memorandum in August 1990) serves as a prime example of institutions at work. The decision involved:

1. The Commission: The Mandal Commission (appointed in 1979) produced the initial recommendation.
2. The Executive/Parliament: The Union Cabinet formally decided to implement the recommendation (1990), and the Prime Minister announced it to Parliament.
3. The Bureaucracy: A senior officer (Joint Secretary) in the Department of Personnel and Training signed the order, merely executing the political decision,.
4. The Judiciary: The Supreme Court ultimately settled the legal disputes arising from the order in 1992, upholding its validity while directing modifications to exclude the well-to-do,.

2. The Political Executive (Ministers and PM)

The executive body is responsible for the execution of government policies. It is composed of two categories:

1. The Political Executive: These are the elected officials (Ministers, Prime Minister) who take the major policy decisions and are elected for a specific period. The political executive, as the representative of the people's will, determines the overall framework and objectives of policy, even if they are not experts in the technical aspects of their ministry.
2. The Permanent Executive (Civil Services): These are the appointed, long-term civil servants who provide expert knowledge, necessary background information, and assist the ministers in day-to-day administration,.

Key Executive Roles:

- Prime Minister (PM): The PM is the head of the government and wields most of the actual governmental powers,. The PM chairs Cabinet meetings, coordinates ministries, and his decisions are final in disagreements between Departments. The rise of coalition politics in recent years, however, imposes constraints on the PM's power, forcing consultation with alliance partners,.
- Council of Ministers/Cabinet: The Council includes 60 to 80 Ministers of different ranks, but the Cabinet (the inner ring of about 25 ministers) is where major policy decisions are taken,. All ministers must own up to every Cabinet decision.
- President: The President is the head of the State and exercises nominal powers,. The President supervises the overall functioning of institutions and is elected indirectly by MPs and MLAs. She must act on the advice of the Council of Ministers, although she can ask for reconsideration once.

3. The Legislature (Parliament)

In India, the national assembly of elected representatives is called Parliament, consisting of the Lok Sabha (House of the People) and the Rajya Sabha (Council of States),. Parliament exercises political authority in several ways:

1. Law Making: Parliament is the final authority for making, changing, or abolishing laws (legislation).
2. Control over Government: Those who run the government can only take decisions as long as they enjoy the support of Parliament. If the majority of the Lok Sabha members express 'no confidence' in the Council of Ministers, the Prime Minister and all ministers must quit.
3. Financial Control: Parliament controls all government money, and public funds can only be spent when sanctioned by Parliament.
4. Highest Forum for Debate: It is the highest forum for discussion and debate on public issues and national policy.

The Lok Sabha is generally more powerful than the Rajya Sabha:

- In disputes over ordinary laws, the Lok Sabha's view usually prevails due to its larger number of members in a joint session.
- The Lok Sabha exercises more power in money matters; the Rajya Sabha can only delay a budget or money-related law by 14 days or suggest changes, which the Lok Sabha may or may not accept.

4. The Judiciary

The Indian judicial system is integrated, with the Supreme Court at the top, controlling the judicial administration of the country.

- Independence: The judiciary is independent of the legislature and the executive; judges are appointed by the President after consultation with senior judges, creating very little scope for political interference,. Once appointed, removing a judge is nearly impossible, requiring an impeachment motion passed by two-thirds of both Houses of Parliament.

- Powers (Judicial Review): The Supreme Court and High Courts have the power of judicial review, allowing them to declare invalid any law or action of the legislature or executive if it violates the Constitution or its basic principles.
- Guardian of Rights: The judiciary acts as the guardian of the Fundamental Rights. Citizens (or any person in the case of public interest) can directly approach the courts for remedy against violations of Fundamental Rights, often utilizing Public Interest Litigation (PIL),,.

The next subject in your review is Political Science Chapter 5: "Democratic Rights." This chapter explores the fundamental necessity of rights in a democracy, details the specific Fundamental Rights guaranteed by the Indian Constitution, and discusses how these rights are protected and enforced.

1. The Necessity of Rights

Elections and stable institutions are necessary for a democracy, but they are not sufficient; the enjoyment of rights is the third essential element for a democratic government,. Democratic rights set limits that even properly elected rulers must not cross,.

The chapter emphasizes that to live without rights, as shown by cases like the prisoners in Guantanamo Bay, women in Saudi Arabia, and ethnic minorities in Kosovo, means living without security, dignity, or fair play,.

What are Rights?

Rights are defined as reasonable claims of a person over fellow citizens, society, and the government that are recognized by society and sanctioned by law,.

- A claim only becomes a right if it is equally possible for others to enjoy it and if it does not harm or hurt others,.
- When socially recognized claims are written into law, they become enforceable, allowing citizens to approach courts if their rights are violated,.
- Rights perform a crucial function in a democracy by protecting minorities from the oppression of the majority,. To prevent elected governments from violating them, basic rights are placed higher than the government itself, usually written down in the Constitution as Fundamental Rights,.

2. Fundamental Rights in the Indian Constitution

The Fundamental Rights translate the promise of equality, liberty, and justice outlined in the Preamble into effect, making them an important basic feature of the Indian Constitution,.

A. Right to Equality

This right establishes the Rule of Law, meaning the laws apply equally to all people regardless of their status, and no one, from the Prime Minister to an ordinary citizen, is above the law,.

- Non-Discrimination: The state cannot discriminate against citizens solely based on religion, race, caste, sex, or place of birth,.
- Equal Access: All citizens must have equal access to public places (shops, hotels, roads, parks) and equality of opportunity in government employment,.
- Affirmative Action: Equality does not mean identical treatment; the Constitution clarifies that special treatment (like job reservations for Scheduled Castes/Tribes/Other Backward Classes) is permitted to ensure genuinely equal opportunity and is not a violation of the Right to Equality,.

- Abolition of Untouchability: The Constitution forbids the practice of untouchability in any form, making it a punishable offense. This refers to any practice that looks down upon people due to their birth or denies them access to public places as equal citizens,.

B. Right to Freedom

Freedom means the absence of unreasonable constraints or interference in a citizen's affairs by others or the government,. The Constitution grants citizens six specific freedoms:

1. Freedom of Speech and Expression: Essential for the development of ideas and personality. This freedom can be exercised through various mediums (pamphlets, art, conversation) but cannot be used to incite violence or defame others,.
2. Assembly in a peaceful manner: Citizens can hold rallies, demonstrations, and meetings on any issue, provided they are peaceful and participants do not carry weapons,.
3. Form associations and unions: Including workers' unions or associations campaigning against corruption,.
4. Movement freely throughout the country.
5. Reside in any part of the country.
6. Practice any profession, occupation, trade, or business.

This right also guarantees the Protection of Life and Personal Liberty,. No person can be arrested or detained without proper legal justification and following due procedure, which includes being informed of the reasons for arrest, being produced before a magistrate within 24 hours of arrest, and the right to consult a lawyer for defense,.

C. Right Against Exploitation

This right aims to protect weaker sections by prohibiting three specific evils:

1. Traffic in human beings: Prohibiting the selling and buying of human beings, often women, for immoral purposes,.
2. Forced labor or begar: Prohibiting the practice where a worker is forced to render service free of charge or for nominal pay. When this is lifelong, it is called bonded labor,.
3. Child labor: Prohibiting the employment of children below 14 years of age in hazardous work like factories, mines, railways, and firecracker manufacturing,.

D. Right to Freedom of Religion

India is a secular state, meaning the state is neutral and impartial, treating all religious beliefs and practices with equal respect and not establishing any one religion as the official religion,.

- Every person is free to profess, practice, and propagate the religion they believe in,.
- The government cannot compel a person to pay taxes for the promotion or maintenance of any specific religion,.
- Religious instruction is prohibited in government educational institutions, and compulsory attendance at religious instruction in privately managed institutions is forbidden,.

- However, the freedom to practice religion does not grant the right to violate public order or infringe upon the freedom of others (e.g., cannot sacrifice human beings or force widows to shave their heads),.

E. Cultural and Educational Rights

These rights exist primarily to protect the interests of minorities (religious or linguistic), whose language, culture, and religion might otherwise be neglected under the dominance of the majority,.

- Cultural Conservation: Any section of citizens with a distinct language or culture has the right to conserve it,.
- Minority Education: All minorities have the right to establish and administer educational institutions of their choice,.
- Equal Admission: Admission to government-maintained or aided educational institutions cannot be denied based on religion or language,.

3. Securing and Expanding Rights

The Right to Constitutional Remedies

This is the most crucial Fundamental Right because it makes the other rights effective and enforceable,. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar called this right the "heart and soul" of the Constitution,.

- If a Fundamental Right is violated by fellow citizens, private bodies, or the government, the aggrieved person can directly approach the Supreme Court or the High Court for a remedy,.
- Courts can declare invalid any law or action of the executive or legislature that violates Fundamental Rights,.
- The Supreme Court and High Courts enforce these rights against individuals, government organizations, and even private bodies by issuing directions, orders, or writs,.

Public Interest Litigation (PIL) and NHRC

- PIL: Any citizen or group can approach the Supreme Court or a High Court (even writing on a postcard) for the protection of public interest against a law or action of the government, even if their own rights were not violated directly,.
- National Human Rights Commission (NHRC): This independent commission, set up by law in 1993, investigates human rights violations and tries to help victims secure their rights, including those mentioned in UN-sponsored international treaties that India has signed,. The NHRC cannot punish the guilty itself, but it conducts inquiries and makes recommendations to the government or intervenes in court on behalf of victims,.

Expanding Scope of Rights

The scope of rights has expanded beyond the initial Fundamental Rights over time through legal and judicial interpretation,.

- The Supreme Court has expanded the meaning of the right to life to include the right to food,.
- Parliament enacted the right to information law, derived from the Fundamental Right to freedom of thought and expression,.

- School education up to the age of 14 years has become a right for Indian citizens,.
- Globally, countries like South Africa guarantee new rights such as the right to privacy, the right to an environment not harmful to health, and the right to adequate housing,. Many people advocate for the right to work and right to health to be made Fundamental Rights in India as well,.
